

Would we honor Hitler with a statue?

Editor, the Record:

Subject: Tribute for a murderer.

Sunday's issue, March 14, had a story of a man and his legend which had been honored (?) with a statue in the middle of Milford. The pro-side of the argument to replace the piece, from Milford Borough Councilman William Kiger, "...it's simply part of the history of the time." It's a nice (sic!) part of our history. It was a fun (again, sic!) legend."

Hey why don't we put up statues of Hitler outside places of worship, or Mussolini outside of Italian-American clubs? When we give attention of this magnitude to criminals/killers and others of an unspiritual/harmonious walk we are saying to our children "It's OK. You can break the law(s) of man and country and still be honored." Please, when will this stop?

And if that's the type of personality that is in charge of Milford Borough, I'm glad I choose not to move there. Who knows? They might have weekly KKK meetings because "it's a part of our history. It was fun."
